TRANSATLANTIC CULTURE, COMMERCE AND THE MODERN WORLD

INSTRUCTOR: PROF. NATALIA COUSTÉ, PH. D. (CINECU)

In this course, we will discover the role Seville played in the origination of the first transatlantic culture, resulting from the encounter between Europe and the New World in 1492. This event set the pillars on which the first transatlantic culture was created. We will discuss how Seville was one of the most important cities in Europe and why it served as the cultural axis between the New World and Europe for centuries.

In addition to exploring the economic importance of Seville to the world today, we will also delve into Spanish society and customs, and learn about local culture, architecture, art and traditions that continue to shape the city's identity into the present day. We will discover how these symbols have evolved through history and how they impact the relationship Sevillians have with their city to this day.

Flamenco Show

An aerial, high-angle view of a historic city, likely Salamanca, Spain. The image is dark and semi-transparent, serving as a background for the text. In the foreground, a large, ornate stone fountain with a central column and a tiered basin is visible. To the right, a massive Gothic cathedral with multiple spires and intricate stonework dominates the skyline. The city below is a dense grid of buildings with red-tiled roofs. The overall atmosphere is one of historical grandeur and architectural detail.
